: Paraphrasing :

① Freedom to and freedom from

There are two kinds of freedom; freedom to and freedom from. Freedom to an individual is his freedom to do what he or she wants to do, which may seem desirable but can lead to anarchy. Freedom from are the rules and regulations that protect the individual from the results of amoral or anarchic behaviour. It ~~is an~~ depends on the individual to understand both freedoms and not underestimate it.

(The Handmaid's Tale, Margaret Atwood)

② Patience and water

Water is a quiet, unassuming element, but it is also one that sits in subtle power. It is an inspiration for ~~our~~ thought, an object for cleansing the body and the mind. It is inspirational in its patient, continuous existence. The purpose of life should be clean and ~~an~~ in its journey, the mind should be nurtured to treat fellows others with kindness and affection. With a gentle and calm and gentle approach, the obstacles in life should be handled and while avoidance is preferable in certain situations. Most of human body is composed of water. It is this feature of human body that - the ~~should~~ water and its aspects that should mould our attitude ~~towards~~ and perception for life.

(The Penelopiad, Margaret Atwood.)

③ Foresight

The day when the human race comes to know about the future in its present, shall be the doomsday for all. God has created humans as <sup>one of the</sup> ~~a~~ self continuously evolving species on earth - to live in present and to learn from the mistakes in past. Ignorance to the future sequel is a blemish for all. If this ignorance breaks even for a second in human, the human life then the growth, the development, the rise <sup>and</sup> the progress shall come to a stand still - there would simply be no space for us to commit ~~the~~ a mistake. With the simple basic tasks and needs of life sublimed in the awareness of the future, the waves of emotions might recede and creating a void ~~&~~ in engagements <sup>and</sup> relationships which may ~~the~~ result in untimely extinction of human race. Thus, being blind to the next second in life is the ultimate blin.
